| Summary     | Site 110; consists of N-S trending IA-RB settlement in which 7 trenches were dug to sample features. Of note is excellent collection of animal bone and palaeo environmental remains.  |
| Description | 1) Evaluation looked at extensive cropmarked settlement. One trench uncovered Roman building foundations (see PRN 7600); the others sampled features of Iron Age to Roman date. Features consisted of rectilinear enclosures as well as ring gullies, probably for Iron Age structures. | Description      | 1) In northern part of site, 3 ditches of ?Iron Age date were identified, with one possibly forming part of trackway reused in RB periods. Multi-phased RB settlement discovered, aligned N-S, covering an area of at least 600m x 110m, and consisting of series of rectilinear enclosures lying immediately W of a trackway. Recovery of stone rubble from an infilled trackway ditch, together with small amounts of painted wall plaster, and roof tile allude to presence nearby of high status Roman building. Discovery of a grave also suggests a possible cemetery in this area. |

| Summary          | Discovery of large collection of Roman material in a field on Pound Croft suggests villa; building foundations revealed by trenching. Further work by OUDCE students confirmed interpretation.   |
| Description      | (1) Resistivity survey by WDFC revealed 'platform' in area of finds concentration. Trial excavation in 1967 revealed 2 floors of limestone slabs and gravel, but no walls. Building footings revealed elsewhere; building was 75' [22.8m] long by 30' [9.1m] wide. Pit with C1 material sealed under one wall, conclusion that site was badly plough damaged. Thorough field survey afterward revealed that area investigated was area of greatest Roman finds. Pottery extended from C1-C4 and one Saxon sherd. No coins 3) Sherds of C2-3 RB coarse pottery, fragmentary ridge tile and pottery "grid-iron" were found by Mr White in ploughed ground about 1 1/4 mile from the village. 4) Analysis of previous work done on this site given. Main thrust of article is fieldwalking and geophysical work done by OUDCE students in area of villa. Reassessment of material from Wantage District Field Club fieldwalking and excavation done; results suggest building in N of same study area covered by 2006 fieldwalking and geophysical work done by OUDCE students. Material found by OUDCE includes much CBM as well as pottery. Geophysical results reveal N-S trackway, with villa on E (only 15m by 7m) and rectangular enclosures on W. 5) Survey of area found further IA and RB material near E Hanney , together with a trackway leading N towards Frilford. Only Trench 1 intercepted building foundations, presumed to be villa despite absence of mosaics, tessellated pavements or other materials associated with villas. |

Plain tile roof with gabled ends. Brick axial and gable-end stacks. PLAN: 2-room plan, possibly with central cross-passage, now blocked; the left [E] room is heated from a gable-end stack. In the C18 the frame was partly rebuilt in brick. A wing was added at the rear of the right end in the C20 and later in the C20 another extension was built at the left [E] end. EXTERIOR: 1-storey and attic. Asymmetrical 5-window north front; the left part timber-framed with tension-brace and brick infilling, the right part Flemish bond brick. C20 1,2,and 3-light casements with glazing bars; over the left bay a weatherboarded gable. Set back on left end C20 timber-frame and brick extension with a porch in the angle. The main roof at the rear is carried down over a verandah between the C20 wing on the left and the later extension on the right. INTERIOR: The central room has deeply chamfered axial beam with large step stops and a large gable-end fireplace with chamfered stone jambs and a renewed lintel. Righthand room has roughly chamfered axial beam without stops. Central partition has jowled post and glazed panel exposing wattle-and-daub infill. | Summary     | Site 417; evaluation trenching revealed activity in 2 distinct time periods: Middle Bronze Age linear features, and a Roman trackway  |
| Description | 1) Originally visible as faint cropmarks on RCHME aerial plot; these consisted of linear features. Correlation between cropmarks and trenched features was good, but was offset by approx 5-6m, probably because of difficulties in plotting cropmarks in the large field which lacked fixed reference points. Designated as site 417 in the reservoir proposal. Trenching was done with the Roman trackway (C1 -2) |

|                         | found in T3 and T4 in the north part of the study area; in T5 two roughly NW-SE ditches, some 29m apart, were dated to MBA; these appear parallel in the trench, but appear to diverge on the AP image. Another MBA feature was found in T2. These features do not suggest any particular focus of activity on the site and presumably relate to a wider area within which settlement was found. No domestic features found. Medieval plough evidence was widespread. |

| Site Name        | Multi-phased linear Romano British settlement with Iron Age components  |
| Summary          | Site 416; consists of linear enclosure complex that appears to be a continuation of PRN 7600. Features from mid C2 through to C4 were found within the settlement, with boundary ditches of C3-4. Late C4-5 pottery found.  |
| Description      | 1) Site consists of linear enclosure complex aligned NNE-SSW and measuring at least 240m x 50m; it appears to be the southern continuation of Site 110 (PRN 7600). Site is comprised of more curvilinear enclosures and less rectilinear enclosures, although these are subdivided by internal ditches. MIA component identified by pottery within a ditch and gully in the N part of the site. LIA material was recovered from 2 gullies, a pit and a pothole in trench 13 in the southern part of the site. Roman pottery collection suggests continued use of the overall area. 4 enclosures found, all dated to RB period; land E of Enclosure C revealed alluvium, resulting from flooding of Cow Common Brook to the E. Presence of limited constructional debris (10 fragments, including box tile) and the existence of structural footings suggests buildings, possibly of high status. It is probable that the settlement was predominantly concerned with agriculture, which may explain the function of several enclosures. Medieval ploughing was also evident |
